Much Tide Has Passed Museum Memories

The year was 2007. The NC Maritime Museum at Southport was deep into its 15th year of daily operation, visitation, programs and classes. The staff of three, always alert to new and interesting means of sharing the rich history of the Lower Cape Fear, was again putting together instruction, fun and games for its week-long Pirate Boot Camp, a favorite of children, parents and grandparents.

History Interpreter Jim McKee and his merry volunteers, including Processing Assistant Punk Spencer, led the troops through their daily classes, readying them for a really Big surprise. Graduation Day was set for June 23, 2007, when the students would demonstrate their new knowledge of the history of privateering, clothing, personal flags, armaments, ships of the period, rigging, sea chanties, ships' food, and battle charges, before walking the plank to receive the all important Certificate of Competency.

The museum's own Stede Bonnet, aka Clark Hunter, safely marched the parade of flag-waving grads along the center line of Howe Street (closed for a short time by the City of Southport Police Dept) to the river, took a left, and marched up the Garrison Bluff. Low and Behold! They were met by costumed Pyrates and Militia, their tented encampment, and their cannon. The event had been quietly arranged by Jim and re-enactor Jeff Bockert of NC Dept of Cultural Resources, Raleigh. Bloody Battle ensued. City Department of Tourism Randy Jones dressed as City Mayor, turned the city over to the winners, and Stede Bonnet stood trial by the Governor on the Garrison Lawn. Punk, husband Don, and Museum Manager Mary Strickland cooked and served all re-enactor's food Friday through Sunday, with the Moore Street Classroom used for pyrate showers and eating. Mary's husband Wayne, State Port Pilot's Jim Harper, and PD Midgett recorded the event for posterity.

The twinkling lights in the Davis Street oak trees shielding the encampment lent a magical atmosphere of quiet evening conversation and visitation of local families on evening walks along the waterfront. The Maritime Museum's surprise adventure was the beginning of the "Pirate Invasion" you know today. (Mary Strickland)

Museum Offers Tours

Investigating the megalodon shark tooth on display, a fourth grade student from the Gillespie Park Elementary School in Greensborough asked, “How big is the shark that tooth came from”? Another student shouted out, “Bigger than this building”!

Children may be back at school, but visitation at the NC Maritime Museum at Southport is still brisk, with over 400 students and special groups touring the Museum during the month of November. Since opening in July, the Museum has had regularly scheduled tours, often given in costume, either Colonial era civilian, Civil War Confederate or Federal.

Visitors interested in learning about the maritime and military history of the Lower Cape Fear Region, Southport and Fort Johnston, should take advantage of the free tours given on a daily basis at 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. If you would like to bring a group, call the museum to schedule a guided tour at your convenience. All tours result in visitors leaving with not only an increased knowledge of the history of the area, but also a very positive impression of the museum. The donation box has reflected visitor’s appreciation. A few tours have even garnered volunteers to the Museum’s very loyal docent corps.

Individuals interested in volunteering at the museum, either as a tour guide or general volunteer, please give the Museum a call. You need not be an expert historian. Orientations will begin in January and the staff will teach you everything you need to know. It is pretty easy and very interesting. Giving tours is about meeting people, sharing information and having fun! For more information, call the NC Maritime Museum at Southport at (910) 457-0003.
